Illicit funds •
China set to overhaul laws

China is planning sweeping revisions to its law against money laundering, as it seeks to curb illicit capital flows that could threaten the security of its financial system and its international reputation. The law has not been updated since it was put in place in 2007, and the country is now grappling with new technologies that complicate anti-laundering efforts.

creators fear for their livelihoods

TikTok content creators and small businesses in the US say that a new law which puts TikTok's parent, Chinese tech giant ByteDance, on a nine-month deadline to divest the video platform or have it banned will have a devastating impact on their livelihoods. An expert says that in the short term, the move will have little impact in Singapore.

Making a bald statement

Local actress and Hair for Hope 2024 celebrity ambassador Julie Tan joined more than 350 volunteers to have their hair shaved off on April 28 at the Kong Meng San Phor Kark See Monastery. Organised by the Children's Cancer Foundation, the campaign is dedicated to increasing awareness about childhood cancer and raising funds to provide vital support. This year's theme is "Hope is Yours to Give", and Hair for Hope aims to raise $4.8 million. PHOTO: LIANHE ZAOBAO
